How can Design Psychology be used to create authentic, fulfilling places? Dr. Israel defines this new field as “the practice of architecture, planning, and interior design, in which psychology is the principle design tool.”

- Discover how the process of past-place experience is applied to residential, institutional and corporate projects.
- Learn hands-on exercises from the “Design Psychology Toolbox” to benefit your practice in creating ideal places for you and your clients.

Toby Israel, Ph.D. is a visionary founder of the new field of Design Psychology. Her international experience and groundbreaking theories are introduced in her recent book, Some Place Like Home. Her work continues to gain nationwide attention, most recently on NPR’s Talk of the Nation, in The Wall Street Journal, The Boston Globe, and The Philadelphia Inquirer. Dr. Israel is in private practice as a Design Psychologist in Princeton, N.J.
